Chapter 1 by Alvin

The dark, hideous clouds stretched on for as far as the eye could see. I couldn't exactly make out the time on my wall as the dim lighting in combination with the dim moonlight trickled through onto the floor. The cramped kitchen, small bathroom and dull grey walls of my apartment enveloped me into this cocoon. I needed to get out. Slowly, the rain came. It was time.

I was dressed in black and headed down towards my white van and drove for about twenty minutes before stopping by the side of the road. This spot was perfect. Trees covering the sky, a poorly laid stone and gravel path and the fresh rain, which created a slippery surface. The silence was deafening.

I exited my van and waddled over towards a bush and I just waited there. My van was hidden from sight, the back doors open. I was ready. I crouched there. Waiting.
